What Shall We Say Then?

By: Monique Jennings

I've had to question the words that have come out of my mouth recently. What I know to be true doesn't always align with how my heart feels. I don't always speak as if my eternal destiny and Christ's love for me is secure. My response doesn't always point to the truth that I am no longer condemned. My conversation may not convince others of God's great love and excellent plans for my life. Can you sympathize with me? Have you noticed moments in your life where you haven't been proud of how you responded to your circumstances?

We've just come out of an excellent study on Romans 8. I'm praying this study wouldn't only be archived in our library of completed series. I pray that we would take seriously setting our minds on things of the Spirit, even when our feelings don't align with what we know to be true. We are responsible for modeling the heart of Christ, even when it feels like our circumstances will crush us. Paul's counsel in Romans 8 is a sure reminder that apart from the Holy Spirit, our circumstances will consume us, and we will be disheartened. These things make walking confidently in the freedom that Christ has offered us a challenge.

When you think about the character God, what do you say to your circumstances? Knowing how He has provided in past times, what do you say to the emotions that cause you to sit in doubt? What shall you say to anything that causes you to question His unfailing love and commitment to you?

As we wrap up Life on Life, amid circumstances none of us could have imagined, I want you to commit to spending time looking at God's character. If anything has caused you to question His goodness (even to the smallest degree), be willing to work on restoring your confidence in Him. He has not and will not change, but our experience with Him can. He is still good. He is still God. He is always faithful, and His commitment to you is unchanged. And to that, we should have something to say.
